Project-Based Learning; Students, Community and Place-Based Learning - 9:00 AM – 10:00 AM

Rachel Carpenter, Leslie Ferre, & Melany Coates, Noyce Borderlands Master Teacher Fellows

Join us as we explore how to build connections between students and community by facilitating real world engagement involving relevant culture, history, and current issues related to STEM. In our first session, participants will define the meaning of community to build and deepen our understanding of our own identity and purpose within different levels of the community. Before joining us, we ask you to think about and identify the various communities that you are a part of, and bring your sense of purpose and commonality within those groups of people with diverse characteristics.

Agrivoltaics; Engaging Students in STEM Field Practices with Agrivoltaics - 10:15 AM – 11:15 AM

Benjamin Davis, Mark Ortega, & Tim Malan, Noyce Borderlands Master Teacher Fellows

Join a teacher-leading-teacher professional learning community and earn access to agrivoltaic kits for your classroom as we continue exploring how Agrivoltaics can provide sustainable solutions for global challenges involving food, energy, and water. In this session we plan to continue our discussion from this summer's Agrivoltaics Institute at the Biosphere 2. How do you plan to use your kits in the classroom? Does the shared curriculum resource work for your age-group? What modifications and support will you need? Participants from this summer's Agrivoltaics Institute are encouraged to attend, but other teachers are welcome to join.
